THE MET

In 18th-century Europe, Indian dyed cloths known as palampores were prized as hand-printed bed coverings and wall hangings. The inspiration for our pattern is a palampore featuring a flower-and-fruit-bearing serpentine tree emerging from a hillock with stylized peaks. Originally sourced to Sri Lanka, it was likely made for European communities in Batavia and Colombo, or for families of mixed European and Asian descent wishing to emulate Western taste.

The Metropolitan Palampore Print features an elemental design depicting a flower-and-fruit-bearing tree, which is digitally printed on a cotton-and-linen blend. This pattern is also available in both a complementary wallpaper and wall mural in various colorways.
